PROBLEM: A LACK OF LEADERSHIP CULTURE

Western States had one goal: to gain occupancy. However, leadership challenges stood in their way. While they could develop effective strategies, they struggled with execution and accountability. They recognized that to bring their strategies to life, they needed to empower their leaders to coach and mentor others.

The company's leadership development efforts had historically been one-off training events with no follow-up or reinforcement, leading to minimal impact.

Western States wanted to move away from this "one-and-done" approach and build a leadership culture centered around continuous learning, accountability, and coaching.

We started with strategic thinking but soon realized that without accountability, the strategy didn't mean much. We needed better coaching and mentoring to hold our leaders accountable and help them implement the strategies they developed. That's when we were introduced to InsideOut.

SOLUTION: IMPLEMENTING THE GROW® MODEL

To address these challenges, Western States partnered with InsideOut Development to integrate the GROW Model into their leadership development program.

The initiative kicked off with a comprehensive leadership conference, where InsideOut trained 30 top leaders as master coaches. These master coaches played a crucial role in disseminating the GROW Model across the company.

We trained 30 of our top leaders to become master coaches with InsideOut's guidance. At our leadership conference, your team introduced the GROW model, and our master coaches facilitated small group discussions to reinforce the concepts.

To ensure that the coaching didn't stop after the initial training, Western States implemented a rigorous follow-up process. Leaders, including the CEO Paul Fairholm himself, visited each property annually to assess how managers were applying the GROW Model in real-time.

We didn't want this to be another 'one-and-done' initiative. This year, we visited all 90 of our properties and asked managers how they were using GROW with their teams.

RESULTS: STRENGTHENED COMMUNICATION, HEIGHTENED TRUST, AND INCREASED PRODUCTIVITY

The results of Western States' partnership with InsideOut Development have been transformative. After implementingThe GROW Model, 97% of leaders reported increased effectiveness in coaching their employees, while 91% rated the overall GROW Coaching approach as highly effective.

The company has seen a shift in how leaders approach strategic planning and accountability. Managers are having better conversations with their teams, leading to improved ownership of responsibilities and more effective execution of strategies.

GROW has helped us improve accountability, foster better conversations, and enhance strategic planning. It's also reignited our Faith, Fire, and Focus across the organization.

– Paul Fairholm CEO of Western States Operationally, Western States saw significant improvements in occupancy rates. Initially trending behind with only four new occupants from January to May, the implementation of The GROW Model led to a surge, resulting in mid-40s new occupants in June, 67 in July, and mid-30s in August.

Additionally, response times to inquiries improved drastically, decreasing from 3 to 4 days to just 2 to 3 minutes. With these changes, Western States is on track to hit their occupancy goal, possibly ahead of schedule by 1 to 2 months. Frequent property visits and ongoing leadership coaching continue to reinforce these gains.

All in all, coaching with The GROW Model has empowered leaders to take ownership of their roles and responsibilities, creating a culture where managers believe in themselves and the company's mission.
